

KKC-BMU Symposium

Nature-Psyche- Culture

Rapid depletion of natural resources, environmental crises, unpredictable shifts in global political relations, cultural erosion, psychological strain, uncertainty, and exhaustion - the major challenges of our time are deeply interconnected. They demand responses and confront us with questions that increasingly seem to overwhelm us.

This interdisciplinary symposium brings together international researchers from various fields and invites participants to rethink the connections between natural conditions, cultural dynamics, and mental health from a truly cross-disciplinary perspective.

Together, we aim to explore how external systemic crises are reflected in our inner worlds - and what cultural, political, and psychological potentials for action may emerge from this understanding.
