Ecological epistemology in cultural psychology and the social sciences

Luca Tateo (University of Oslo, Norway)

The environmental crisis has challenged the social sciences - and psychology in particular - to radically rethink the place of humans on the planet. This may be an opportunity to reflect on the epistemological and metaphysical foundations of psychology and to move from an egocentric way of relating to the world to a non-centric and truly ecological way. Is such a radical change in the knowledge of the self possible? That is what we want to find out in this discussion.

Luca Tateo is Professor in epistemology, theory and methodology of qualitative research at the University of Oslo, Norway, and Visiting Associate Professor at the Federal University of Bahia, Brazil. He is co-editor in chief of the journal Human Arenas: An Interdisciplinary Journal of Psychology, Culture, and Meaning. Luca Tateo is a close co-operation partner of the KKC.
